About the conference

Each year, the ICGS conference provides a forum for international academics and policymakers to showcase and discuss the latest corporate governance research issues and practices. The 11th annual conference aims to foster a lively, multidisciplinary dialogue and debate among scholars and practitioners by concentrating on the transformative role of corporate governance. As we are experiencing continuous transformation in the contemporary business world, companies are expected to navigate a changing economic and socio-political environment in an effective and sustainable way. For example, business communities and management scholarship are increasingly paying attention to “grand challenges” such as:

- Artificial intelligence
- Climate change
- Deglobalisation
- Geopolitical tensions
- Global health issues
- Poverty reduction

While corporate governance is well-recognised for promoting accountability to shareholders and stakeholders, its role in helping companies manage external changes and transform their practices and environment is still underexplored. It becomes evident that we need to further understand and appreciate the role of corporate governance in periods of societal transformation. As the first industrial city and a hub of innovation, Manchester is the ideal place for such discussions and exchanges of ideas.

Topics include:

- The role of corporate governance in the context of helping companies to manage the external transformative forces and to transform their organisational practices and external business/societal environment.
- The roles of boards of directors and senior executives as well as other internal governance actors such as audit executives, general counsel, and ESG officers.
- Antecedents and outcomes of different types of ownership.
- How firms' strategic decisions are influenced by external governance mechanisms.
- The relationship between corporate governance and stakeholders.
- The role of corporate governance in a (de)globalising economy and the comparison of corporate governance mechanisms/practices across the world.

Call for Papers and Proposals

You can submit your paper or proposal from 1st March 2025. You must submit your paper or proposal through our online conference management system – a link will be added to our webpage in due course. You must submit it by 23:59 (UK time) on 30th June 2025. You'll be contacted about your submission's result a few weeks after the deadline - this date will be announced on our webpage when confirmed. The best submissions will be considered for the best conference paper award. The author(s) awarded with this will be recognised at the conference.

Submission guidelines

Your submission must build on your own previously unpublished original research. You can submit either a full paper or a research proposal. Whichever option you choose, we are looking for research that will advance the field of corporate governance. If you submit a full paper, it must not be longer than 60 double-spaced pages - this includes your abstract, references, tables, and figures. If you submit a research proposal, it must not be longer than 10 single-spaced pages in length or 3,000 words. It must also include the following sections: Abstract - a 200 to 300 words description that summarises the overall study; Proposal - a narrative description of the conceptual or empirical study; Supporting materials - tables, figures, and references that support your proposal. On your paper or proposal's title page, you should indicate which of the conference tracks best fits. The Track Chairs might shift your paper or proposal into another track to the one you submit if they think it fits better.
